Publishing Policy

The Web is the Chamber's primary focus for publication. In line with its goals for electronic service delivery, all of the Chamber's publications are available on its website.

Publishing online brings many benefits:

- It makes our publications available to anyone with an Internet connection, anywhere and at any time of day or night;
- It is good for the environment because it avoids the need to consume large quantities of paper to distribute information;
- It is cost-effective because it eliminates printing and distribution costs, enabling us to use our resources instead to produce further useful materials and provide better services;
- It ensures that the latest version of any of our publications becomes available quickly and conveniently via our website; and
- It enables us to produce rich, dynamic documents with hyperlinks to a wide variety of other online resources, both on our website and elsewhere.

Most of our publications for the general public are also available in hard-copy format. We will continue to produce versions of these publications in hard copy. Please get in contact with us if you wish to print this copy or desire a printed version of this e-book. Naturally the online versions of these publications will have Web functionality, such as hyperlinks, not possible in the hard copy versions.

Versions

The definitive and most current versions of our publications will always be those on our website.

Rights

The user is granted the right to use the purchased publication within and throughout the user's organisation in the manner described below:

You may:

- Make the publication available to your organisation through your organisation's computer systems/networks; and
- Produce printed copies of the publication for reference use within your organisation.

You may not:

- Pass any copy of the publications or any part of them, in any form, out of your organisation;
- Make any changes, alterations, amendments or additions to the content, text or structure of the publication, without the express permission of the German-Australian Chamber; or
- Delete any section or part of any publication (i.e. a publication should be made available internally as a complete and true copy).
